UTAH GETS TWO ACTING ASSISTANT STATE CONSERVATIONISTS FROM CALIFORNIA

In addition to many Californians moving to Utah, NRCS has two California employees who are here on 120-day temporary assignment as assistant state conservationists. Both, shown in the accompanying photo, have arrived within the last two weeks. Hue ("Way Cool") Dang is acting assistant state conservationist for operations and Dave Rose is acting assistant state conservationist for technology.

Hue has spent her entire NRCS career in California where she currently is district conservationist in Placerville, located near the foot hills of the Sierra Nevada Mountains. Earlier she opened a field office in Oroville where she was DC for 4 years. She looks forward to blending her field office experience with this state-level assignment in Utah to help advance the operations of NRCS statewide. She can be reached at 524-4552; hue.dang@ca.usda.gov.

Dave is a native of Oregon and received a range science degree from Oregon State University. He is currently area resource conservationist in Willows, an area in Northern California. He has worked for NRCS in the Southeastern portion of Washington, for 11 years in Minnesota, and for the past five years in California.

He looks forward to working with the resource staff and assisting with field operations work in Utah. He can be reached at 524-4562; david.rose@ca.usda.gov.

Both got more acquainted with Utah agriculture and its conservation partners during the UACD Conservation Field Days held last week in Box Elder County. The accompanying photo shows them in front of the NRCS exhibit at that event.
